THE SONG OF THE BROOK.

I haste by hill and valley, I haste by mead and lee, I am the messenger From the mountains to the sea, I am the messenger From the mountains to the sea, And every meadow thrills While I carry to the ocean The tidings of the hills. And every meadow hears it, For as I go each day, Let I forget the message, I sing it all the way.

And the lily blooms grow whiter, And the meadows ring With the exultant gladness Of the message that I sing. What do I tell the ocean? That all the hills are strong, And all the forests on their peaks Melodious with song. That to the youth of nature The hoary hills are true, And that the ancient mountains And this old world are new.

What do I tell the ocean? That on the sun-kissed hills Are perfumed winds of healing, And music-haunted rills; From their eternal altars, For evermore shall rise, In all the Eden freshness, New incense to the skies. The hazy mists of summer That o'er their summits dwell Brood like a benediction That says that all is well.

What do I tell the ocean? I say the hills are fair, And drink the ever fresher health From heaven's enfolding air; That sunward ferns are springing Within their deepest glooms, And that the fields are drifted With snow and apple blossoms; And that there's mighty music Where mountain torrents meet, And that the heart of nature For evermore is sweet.

What do I tell the ocean? I say the hills are high, But draw new youth each morning From the challenge of the sky. They drink the virtue of the day, The great sun's heat and light, And bathe themselves in stillness And the silence of the night. And the wind around their summits With strong, triumphant breath, Proclaim above the land of graves That there can be no death.

What do I tell the ocean? That life blooms everywhere; That the day is glad with music, And all the world is fair, And the proud tiered hills And meadow grasses near, And all the drooping willows And alders bend to hear My song of joy and gladness, My song of hope and peace, Makes one long strip of greenness From the mountains to the sea.

So will I tell the ocean, What the strong mountains say, With all the voices ringing, These gathered on the way; That the smile of deathless beauty, As at creation's birth, With all its old, eternal charm, Still glorifies the earth. To tell this to the ocean, I through the mist am whirling, So that its mountain anthem May tell it to the world. —Sam Walter Foss, in N. Y. Sun.

Figures in a Barber's Shop.

A Chester man who was anxious to know how many strokes of the razor a barber made in shaving him counted them, and was quite surprised to find what a contract it was to remove the hair from his scalp. The work of lathering the customer's Roman mug wasn't included in the enumeration, the counting not beginning until the razor, freshly stropped, was applied to the face. The barber removed the soap first applied, and by that time the strokes numbered 200. The lathering was done over again, and when the soap was removed the second time the score had crept up to 425. The barber gave his customer a careful shave, and when the last stroke had been made the customer had counted 679.—Chester News.

He Knew the Boy.

This story is told of Mr. Rudyard Kipling, as illustrating very clearly the characteristics of the vigorous English boy who was afterwards to achieve such widespread fame with his pen. When a boy of twelve, he went on a voyage with his father, who, becoming desperately seasick, retired to his berth, leaving young Rudyard to his own devices. Presently the poor father heard a tremendous commotion over his head, and down the companionway dashed the boatwain three steps at a time, shouting excitedly: "Mr. Kipling, your boy has crawled out on the yard arm; if he ever lets go he'll drown, sure." "Yes," said Mr. Kipling, falling back on his pillow, with a sigh of relief, "but he won't let go."—Household Words.

"Seven years ago, my wife had a severe attack of lung trouble which the physicians pronounced consumption. The cough was extremely distressing, especially at night, and was frequently attended with the spitting of blood. The doctors being unable to help her, I induced her to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was surprised at the great relief it gave. Before using one whole bottle, she was cured, so that now she is quite strong and healthy. That this medicine saved my wife's life, I have not the least doubt."—K. Monks, Memphis, Tenn.
